STRONGER THAN IN 1921

McGraw's Men.

By W. O. McGEHEAN.

Following to-day's double header Henry Fabian, landscape gardener extraordinary, will begin to arrange the open air set for the melodrama or the farce which will evolve from the world series of 1922 starting next Wednesday. For the second time the New York Giants and the New York Yankees, two units of the most expensive athletes in captivity, will be the actors in the annual performance. The series which starts Wednesday promises to be the most spectacular battle of bats, curves, baseball strategy and certified checks ever staged in the shadow of Coogan's Bluff.

Whatever else may happen the series which is about to break right in the faces of some 38,000 cash customers cannot be as long drawn as the one of last year from which the Giants emerged world champions. To collect the winner's end this year the athletes will be required to win four games out of seven instead of five out of nine. With fair weather the series should be finished by October 11, even to the counting of the certified checks and the estimation of how much should be paid each athlete and each of the opposing magnates.

The Giants, with perhaps the poorest looking pitching staff that McGraw has carried in years, arrived at the mathematical certainty for the National League pennant some time ago. The Yankees, with about the best pitching staff in either league, arrived at this objective only yesterday, the iron fist of Col. Tillinghast L'Hommedieu Huston, vice-president of the club, having cracked under the strain in the last few games. The betting—what there is of it—favors the Yankees. The last odds quoted make them favorites by 7 to 5. These bets have been made on the relative strength of the teams under normal conditions. No allowances have been made for temperament, and the Yankees are loaded with temperament.

New Blood for Yankees.

Since they last met the Giants in a world series the Yankees have become a much stronger team on paper and in the salary roll. Col. Jacob Ruppert, with his ready fountain pen, has added to the Yankee payroll of last year Bullet Joe Bush, the most powerful of the Yankee pitchers,umping Joseph Dugan, said to be one of the best third basemen in either league; Whitey Witt, the agile Albino, and the best lead off man in the game; and, in the second, Scott, a Yankee shortstop that Peckinpaugh, and Sad Sam Jones. All of these players were obtained from Harry H. Frazee, the most extensive dealer in ivory since the days when Connie Mack snatched the perfect baseball team and hawked it through the big league cities.

It is largely on account of the pitching staff that the Yankees have become a much stronger team on paper and in the salary roll. Col. Jacob Ruppert, with his ready fountain pen, has added to the Yankee payroll of last year Bullet Joe Bush, the most powerful of the Yankee pitchers,umping Joseph Dugan, said to be one of the best third basemen in either league; Whitey Witt, the agile Albino, and the best lead off man in the game; and, in the second, Scott, a Yankee shortstop that Peckinpaugh, and Sad Sam Jones. All of these players were obtained from Harry H. Frazee, the most extensive dealer in ivory since the days when Connie Mack snatched the perfect baseball team and hawked it through the big league cities.

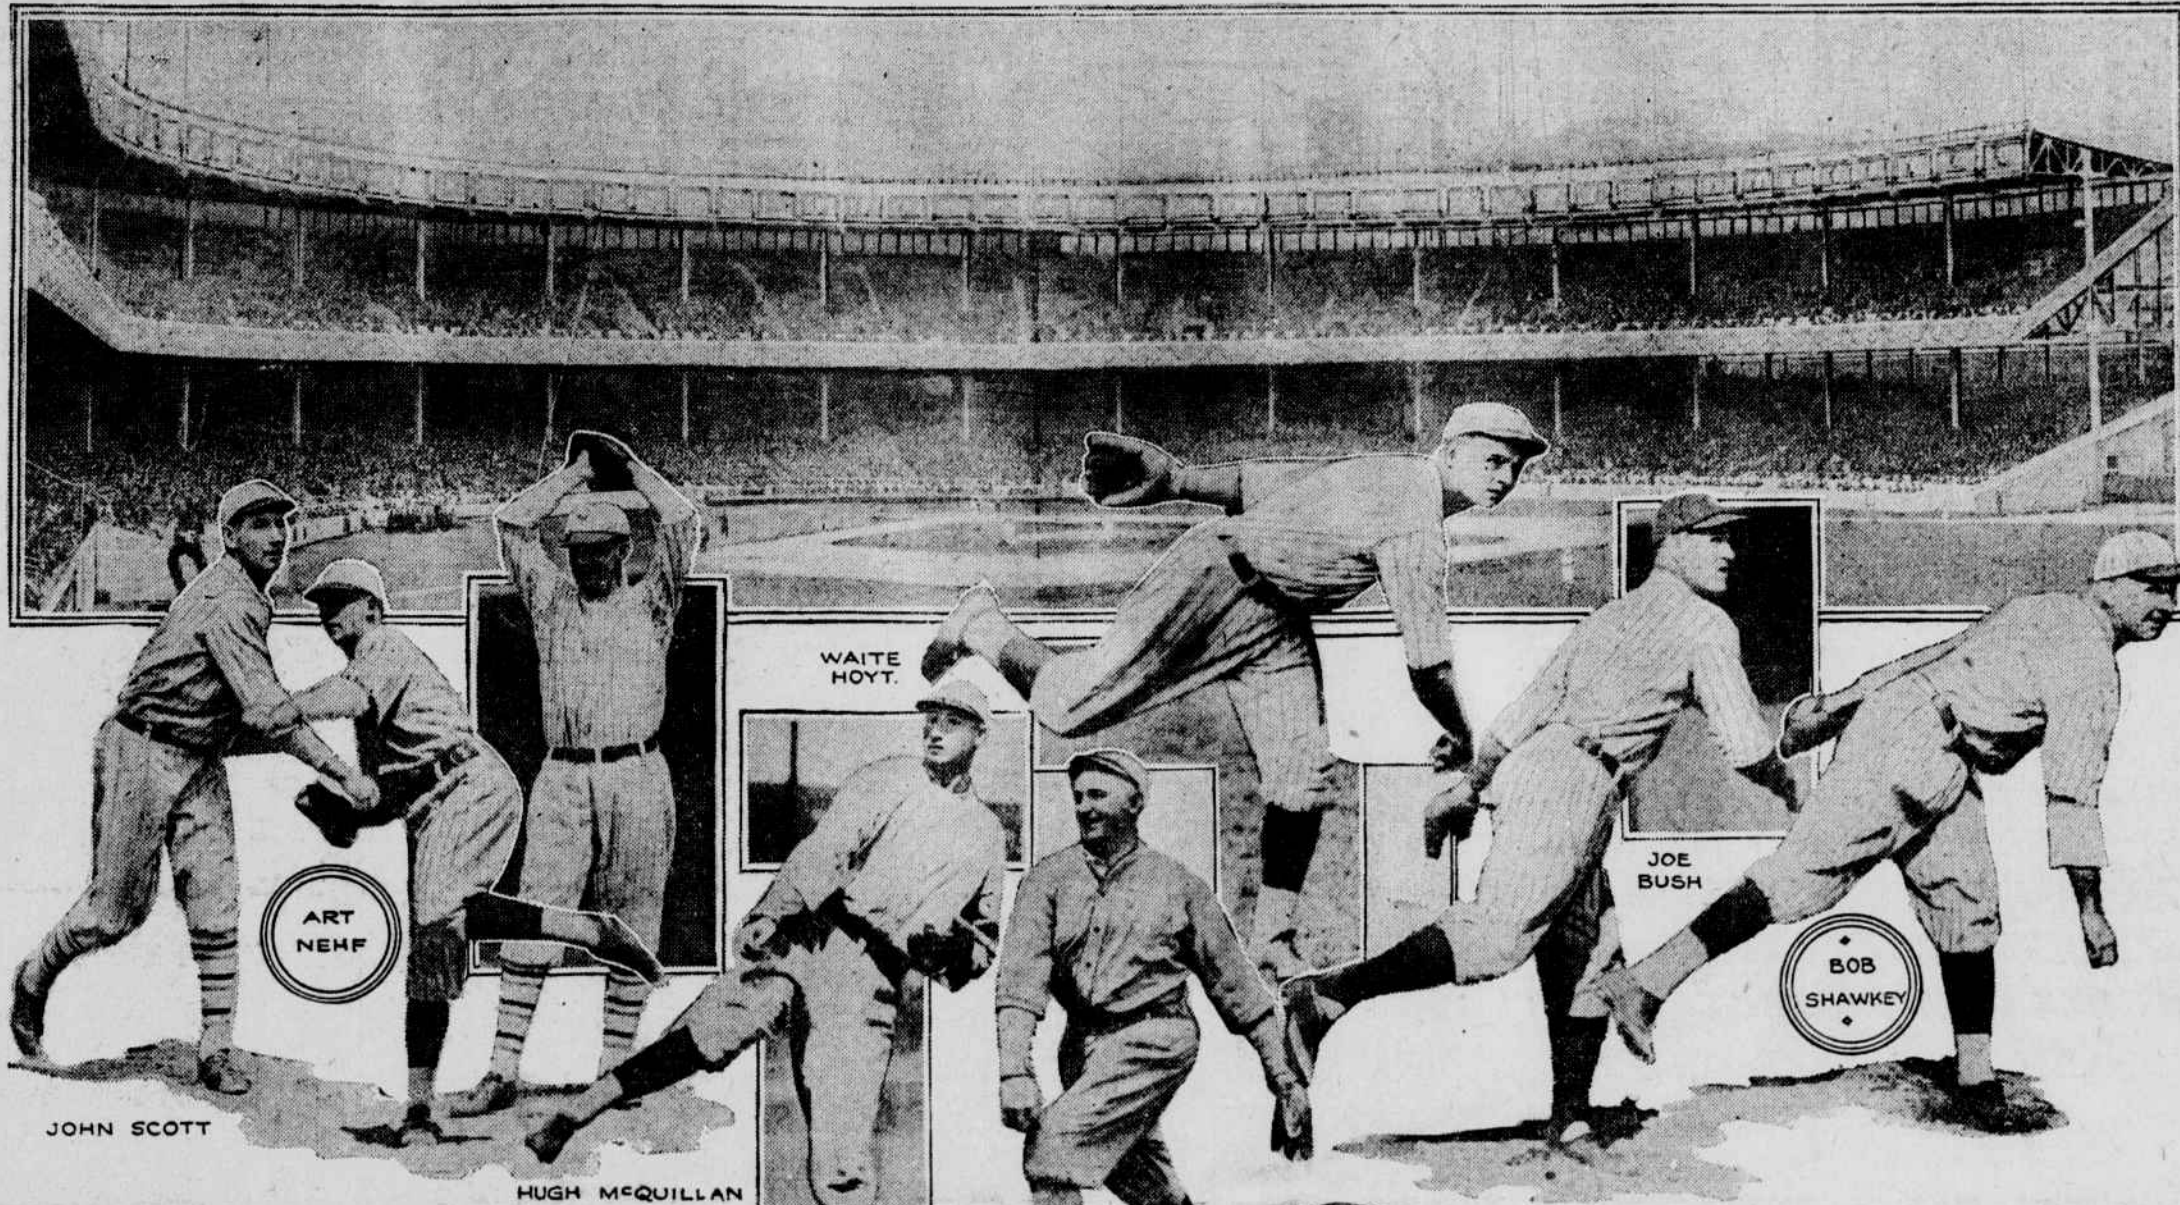

Some time ago they dubbed the Yankee batting order "Murderers Row." Sometimes it justifies the name. At other times it looks like a section of the Y. M. C. A. in good standing. At the start of the season which is waning it was thought that the Yankees would be the team to watch. But the Yankees should bat their way to the top of the league at the start and remain there. But the failure of the bats to connect at critical moments kept the Yankees from doing so.

Whitely Witt Delivered.

Whitely Witt, who was picked up by the Yankees at a bargain at one of Mr. Cornelius McGinnis' bargain sales in old Ivory, was bought to fill in a gap during the exile of Babe Ruth. The agile Albino started to prove that he was worth the purchase price from the start. While he batted no balls against the welkin after the fashion of the Babe, he hit, and his hitting kept the Yankees in the going. As a leadoff man he filled a place which has been practically vacant on the Yankees for some years.

Looking backward over the Yankees' last drive for their pennant it was Whitely Witt who won it for them. The little center fielder, who was knocked unconscious in the first game of the actually crucial St. Louis series, came back in the third game and drove in the winning score. That blow shattered the morale of the St. Louis Browns and knocked all the pennant hopes from under the St. Louis customers. If the Yankees had lost that game Cousin Egebert Barnes would not at the current writing be engaged in the pleasant task of balancing checks for the world series. Mr. Phil Ball of St. Louis would be counting the change, and there is nothing that Given the pitching staff of the Yankees the Giants without question would be prohibitive favorites over the American League champions in the world series, which will be opened on Wednesday. But the National League standard bearers face the classic with a hurling corps which by many critics is regarded as the weakest which yet has won its way into a test for the world title. As a result the Yankees, with a stellar pitching corps and a great array of fielders and hitters, have been established favorites at 5 to 7.

Favorites have won many world series—but many a favorite, too, has been trounced right merrily. Odds are very interesting, but usually they mean nothing. Unexpected heroes have a way of rising in the field, at bat, in the pitching box. The breaks are the things to watch—and the club which is favored with them and knows how to dash through for runs usually earns the honors.

The Giants are handicapped in pitching, but they are not quite without some strength in that important department. They have one big asset—a good left-hander in the able person of Arthur Nehf, who won the final game last year. A good left-hander will make all kinds of trouble for the Yankees even as a capable southpaw will hold a big advantage over the National Leaguers. But the Yankees enter the series with a stellar pitching corps and a great array of fielders and hitters, have been established favorites at 5 to 7.

Scott May Turn Trick.

Behind Nehf the Giants have Jess Barnes, pitching hero of the 1921 series, who took two decisions over the Yankees after Fred Toney had been battered out of the box; Hugh McQuillan, Jack Scott, Bill Ryan, Carmen Hill, Claude Jonnard and Virgil Barnea. Many veteran students of the game believe that Scott will make more trouble for the Huggins troupe than any of the other right handers on the McGraw staff.

Scott has a lot of stuff and a fine change of pace. He has a slow ball which may bother the American Leaguers abnormally and he has a fast one, too. Scott can throw a big assortment of curves, and a curve ball slinger with a slow one has made the Yankees look bad time and again this year. Scott's going the route, of course, is problematical. If he can go along leisurely he may turn the trick.

Strawbridge Breaks 6-6 Polo
Tie With Eastcott in the Final Period.

By CAPT. H. H. HOLMES.

MEADOW BROOK CLUB, WESTBURY, L. I., Sept. 30.—Louis Stoddard's Shelburne team had the distinction to receive the Monty Waterbury cup from Mrs. August Belmont after defeating the Anglo-American team, designated as Eastcott, by 7 goals to 6 here to-day before a crowd of 15,000 persons.

Bobbie Strawbridge scored the only tally made in the final period. That gave the American team the deciding point. It was a game that furnished the spectators a spectacle that thrilled them from start to finish. At no time during the game was the issue a certainty for either team.

In the early morning Laddie Sanford lost one of his best ponies, known as Black Lou. A groom inadvertently left the stable door open and the pony was not found before the game commenced.

FIRST PERIOD.

At the throw in Sanford took the ball down the field and hit behind the Shelburne goal. From the knock in the play continued in Shelburne territory. Lockett eventually scoring from the throw in, Hopping made a goal. Belmont did the same thing when the umpire threw the ball in again, and Sanford was unlucky enough not to score when his shot at goal port the post. Belmont saved on the goal line.

SECOND PERIOD.

Stoddard got away with the ball and hit it to Webb, who centered it back with a pass which enabled the former to score. Strawbridge tallied from the throw in, evening the score after the Shelburne goal had been bombarded by Sanford and Hurdall. Later Hopping, with a very clever backhand, scored. Hurdall started a run that looked bad for Shelburne, but Strawbridge gained possession of the ball. After carrying it three quarters of the length of the field he missed his opportunity to tally. Eastcott, 4; Shelburne, 3.

THIRD PERIOD.

Bobbie Strawbridge changed the bad outlook for his team at the commencement of this chuckle and, only through the fine hitting of Lockett, was he robbed of a goal. From the knock in Sanford carried the ball to his enemy's headquarters, but Strawbridge and Stoddard relieved the situation. A foul allowed against Webb earned the Eastcott team a free hit, but Belmont stopped the resulting play. The Eastcott players kept on top of the Shelburne goal.

YOUTHFUL GOLFER WINS TITLE EASILY

Providence Girl Defeats Briton
5 and 4 to Carry Off
Links Crown.

By KERR N. PETRIE.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., Sept. 30.—In a russet rimmed basin of the Allegheny Mountains where the lazy morning mists sleep on until evening and blend with the blue haze of corn mash a nineteen-year-old American miss in the person of Glenna Collett of the Metacomb Club of Providence to-day rounded out a perfect score for America in International golf by defeating Mrs. William A. Gavin of Huntercombe, England, 5 and 4 to play, in the thirty-six hole final of the annual women's national championship on the links of the Greenbrier Club.

By her victory over Mrs. Gavin Miss Collett accomplished a feat unusual in high class tournament play, for she won the cup although weighted down by the traditional jinx which is popularly supposed to attach itself like an octopus to the player who leads the field in the qualifying round.

Miss Collett won the medal handsily with an 81 on Monday and continued to show the same brand of golf straight through the week. The climax to her fine game came to-day when she downed Mrs. Gavin, who, during her several years' residence in New York, twice won the metropolitan championship and twice has been a national finalist as well as semi-finalist on another occasion.

Final Match Decided Early.

Miss Collett had the match won in the morning round when she finished 4 up. Ordinarily Mrs. Gavin is qualified to make it interesting for the best, but in this contest she was very badly off form. With the one playing at the top of her game, save on a first few holes, and the other on a majority of the holes showing about as poor golf as she is capable of, the issue was not long in doubt.

Had the match been at eighteen instead of thirty-six holes Miss Collett would have won more convincingly than she did. For in the later stages of the contest Mrs. Gavin played up in the face of long odds with skill and courage. How she must have regretted allowing her opponent to amass such a commanding lead on the first eighteen! And how glad Miss Collett's friends and admirers were that the first part of the match had turned out to be so one-sided!

Hitting the ball much better than she had done, Mrs. Gavin began to cut into her opponent's lead in the second round with such purpose that she had reduced the six holes to four by the time the turn had been reached. Miss Collett won the twelfth to become 5 up again, but Mrs. Gavin carried off the thirteenth by laying her brassie shot within ten feet of the cup. She almost holed a 5. However, on the fourteenth Mrs.

KOPPISCH SCORES THREE TOUCHDOWNS

Gehrig, Roderick and Burt
Get Other Four in Impressive Playing.

By KERR N. PETRIE.

Columbia University opened its 1922 football season in an auspicious manner yesterday afternoon at South Field, when she rolled up a typical Cornell score, bowling over Ursinus College, 48 to 7. Capt. Walter Koppisch was the individual high scorer, tallying three times, while Lou Gehrig, the former Commerce High School boy, scored twice, and Ben Roderick and Bob Burt each once.

After each of the seven touchdowns the Blue and White elected to gain the extra point by kicking a goal from placement. The locals were successful on six occasions, Roderick booting the ball between the goal posts four times out of his five chances, while Stuart Blundell and Lou Gehrig were successful when each had a chance to do the kicking.

The most optimistic of Columbia's followers conceded that she would score three touchdowns during the fracas, and possibly four. But instead, the Lion tallied two touchdowns and two extra points by placement kicks in every period except the second, when only one score was made, and Ben Roderick failed to kick successfully.

The scoring of Ursinus' lone touchdown, which was tallied in the third period when the score stood 34 to 0, brought the 3,000 spectators to their feet. After Columbia's fifth touchdown Bob Burt kicked off and his boot was received by Faye. The quarterback placed the ball behind the Columbia goal, as a result of a scintillating run of eighty yards. The Pennsylvania's field general dodged one would-be tackler after another until he reached midfield, where the nearest Blue and White player, Walter Koppisch, was about twenty yards away. The local's leader almost got him. Although a star runner, Koppisch was unable to get his hands on his opponent. Eched elected to kick from placement and the score became 34 to 7 as the ball sailed between the posts.

Make 24 First Downs.

The Blue and White reeled off first downs with a surprising regularity, adding one after another until the total number reached twenty-four when the final whistle blew. On the other hand, the Collegeville players could only gain the requisite ten yards on four consecutive plays but once. That lone first down came with one play as the result of a 30 yard forward pass early in the second quarter.

PIPP STARS IN VICTORY

His Single in First Inning
Drives in Two Runs—Final
Score 3 to 1.

Special Dispatch to The New York Herald.

Boston, Sept. 30.—The mathematical certainty which eluded their ardent pursuit through the closing game of their series at Cleveland and the first two games of their three day battle with the Fenway Fusiliers finally surrendered to the Yankees this afternoon, when the Ruppert-Huston forces clinched their second successive pennant by defeating the Boston Red Sox, 3 to 1, in next to the last game of the season.

They won in the first inning by scoring three runs on consecutive hits by "Whitey" Witt, Joe Dugan, Babe Ruth and Wallie Pipp and a sacrifice by Meusel. The hits were made off Alex. Ferguson, himself a former Yankee. The towering lift which accounted for the champions' last run was made off Southpaw Herbert Pennock, who replaced the tactician Jersseyman after Pipp had driven two runs across with a low line single past Burns.

After that it was merely a question of keeping the Sox away from the plate, and Waite Hoyt and Bullet Joe Bush attended to that detail. Hoyt started and permitted only one hostile batter to reach first base in the first four innings. He weakened thereafter, and gave way to Bush in the ninth after a pass to Johnny Mitchell and a single by Muddy Ruel had put the tying runs on base with none out. With the expert aid of Wallie Schang, who caught a runner snapping off second, Bush retired the side without a run and the Yankees' triumph was assured.

Pipp Makes Good.

After scoring only one run in twenty-eight consecutive innings the Yankees started to-day's affair by showing three scores over the plate in the opening round. Witt launched the drive with a single over second and Dugan dropped a Texas leaguer back of Pratt. Ruth beat out a punt toward third and Pipp came to bat with the bases filled and none out.

The Michigan mauler responded in the pinch with a single past Burns, scoring Witt and Dugan and sending Ruth to third. Joe went to second on J. Collins' throw to stop the rally, but Pipp was taken out of the box and Bob Meusel substituted southpaw Herbert Pennock's appearance on the hill with a sacrifice fly, which brought Ruth home.

Pennock scored the side without further scoring and wasn't in trouble again until the third, when Dugan led off with a single to right and Ruth drew a pass. It looked like another big inning for the Yankees, but Pipp bunted a pop foul to O'Rourke and Meusel grounded to Mitchell for a double play which ended the inning.

The Red Sox had made only one hit off Hoyt in the four innings and sent only one man to first. With one out in the fifth, however, J. Collins singled to center, for his second hit, and went to third when Witt furnished Mitchell's line single. The batter went to second. Ruth then grounded to Pipp, whose throw to Schang caught Collins at the plate, and Witt retired the side by snagging Pennock's bolt.

The enemy tried it again in the seventh and touched the boy wonder for three hits and one run. O'Rourke led off with a single to left and went to third on a sacrifice fly. Pipp drew a line single to center. He scored when Mitchell grounded to Ward for a force out at second. Ruel singled to right, and after Harris, batting for Pennock, had popped out, Pipp batted. He drew a single, filled the bases. Elmer Miller, another former Yankee, then came to bat and popped to Ward for the third out.

Bennie Carr, a right hander, was on the mound for the Sox when the Yankees came to bat in the eighth. After getting rid of Hoyt, Carr passed Witt, who was forced at second base on Dugan's drive to Burns.

Ruth sent the runner to third, with a line single to center, but Mitchell came up with Pipp's scorching smash and tossed it to Pratt for a force out which ended the inning.
